bombon

(Eva Fàbregas, b. 1998, lives and works in Barcelona)

Working with soft and malleable materials, Fàbrega's practice embraces tactile engagement, physical intimacy, sensorial relation and multiple forms of somatic experimentation with and through objects. Liberated from the constraints of biology, desire and affect are allowed to flow in all directions, blurring the distinction between organic and inorganic matter. In her practice, touch is a primary source of knowledge. Her work is about learning through one's fingers and the sculptures are often reminiscent of body organs and voluptuous glands, but she also looks at prosthetics as well as non-human life-forms such as corals, polyps and the reproductive parts of plants. Fàbregas' work belongs to the realm of the somatic, the experiential, the guttural and the unnamable. It aims to fully inhabit the world of the senses, invoking a pre-linguistic stage to imagine other possible bodies, other ways of feeling, caring and being in the world.

Her recent exhibitions include Exudates (MANIFESTA 15, Barcelona, 2024), Songs for the Changing Seasons (Klima Biennale, Viena, 2024), When Forms Come Alive (Hayward Gallery, London, 2024), Devouring Lovers (Hamburger Bahnhof, Berlin, 2023), Enredos

EXUDATES (2024)

Exudates (2024) installation detail

MAC Mataró, Mataró, ES
Part of MANIFESTA15

The Catalan artist Eva Fàbregas' parasitic sculptures ooze from the cracks and wounds of the Mataró prison. These air-moulded entities are haunting reminders of how organs and flesh respond to tension and release. By manipulating the elasticity of synthetic fabrics, the drying times of latex and the tension of inflation and deflation processes, these wrinkled membranes destabilize the particular architecture of the building. The work is titled after the fluid that leaks from living organisms in response to injury or inflammation. Exudation is often a normal part of the healing process; however, in the wrong amount, place or composition, it can also delay or complicate recovery. As Fàbregas' entities proliferate within the venue, they alter it and, at the same time, introduce a new symbolic element for its rehabilitation.

INTENCIÓN POÉTICA (2024)

Intención poética (2024) exhibition detail

MACBA, Barcelona, ES

Curated by Claudia Segura

Taking its title from Glissant's book, Poetic Intention can be understood as an exercise in breaking free from the institutional framework, offering a space for reflection and critique in which 'art', both as concept and experience, is presented as a generative and emancipatory force. This new approach to the Collection features, in large part, works acquired in recent years, setting them in new relationships with the existing Collection, but it also includes works that are entering the Museum for the first time, making its history and context more permeable and open.

Klima Biennale, Vienna, AT

Curated by Filipa Ramos y Lucia Pietroiusti

Songs for the Changing Seasons brings together an international group of artists to reflect on the myriad ways, at once concrete and poetic, in which art is addressing the realities, effects and consequences of planetary transformation. Songs for the Changing Seasons considers forms of love, attention, repair and grief that meet with ecological challenges and damages. Assuming environmental transformation as a reality, the exhibition looks at where, when and how trouble is felt and expressed, and how art offers vital ways to articulate, interpret and cope with this trouble.

WHEN FORMS COME ALIVE (2024)

When Forms Come Alive (2024) exhibition view

Hayward Gallery, London, UK

Curated by Ralph Rugoff, Katie Guggenheim and Anusha Mistry.

Spanning over 50 years of contemporary art, this exhibition at the Hayward Gallery highlights ways in which artists draw on familiar experiences of movement, flux and organic growth.

Inspired by sources ranging from a dancer's gesture to the breaking of a wave, from a flow of molten metal to the interlacing of a spider's web, the artworks in this exhibition conjure fluid and shifting realms of experience. Undulating, drooping, erupting, cascading and promiscuously proliferating, these sculptures invite a tactile gaze, and trigger physical responses. In an era when our encounters are increasingly digitised and disembodied, these artworks call to mind the pleasures of gesture and movement, the poetics of gravity and the experience of sensation itself.

Featuring the work of 21 contemporary artists from around the world, this is a joyous celebration of sculpture and installation and the medium's ability to capture the imagination.

Devouring Lovers (2023) exhibition detail

Hamburger Bahnhof, Berlin, DE

Curated by Anna-Catharina Gebbers

What are the limitations of desire? How can a feeling be transmitted through and with objects? These are some of the fundamental questions that Eva Fàbregas explores through her work. For her largest solo exhibition to date, the Barcelona-based artist has created a monumental installation that she conceived especially for Hamburger Bahnhof's main historical hall. Flesh-like sculptures wind around the hall's metal girders, like devouring lovers, creating a surreal impression of organs growing from metal. Slight vibrations animate some of the seventy sculptures reinforcing the impression of tentacles. The entire hall becomes a breathing organism where the boundaries between the technologically generated and the human / non-human worlds blur.

Working with soft and malleable materials, Eva Fàbregas' work embraces tactile engagement, physical intimacy, and sensorial relations, where touch is a primary source of knowledge. Her work is about learning through one's fingers and the sculptures are often reminiscent of body organs and voluptuous glands, but she also looks at prosthetics as well as non-human life forms such as corals, polyps and the reproductive parts of plants. Fàbregas aims to fully inhabit the world of the senses, creating sculptures that invoke a pre-linguistic stage to imagine other possible bodies, other ways of feeling, caring and being in the world.

ENREDOS (2023)

Enredos (2023) exhibition view

Centro Botín, Santander, ES

Curated by Eva Fàbregas y Bárbara Muñoz

Enredos: Eva Fàbregas proposes an intuitive and visceral interplay between Eva's sculptures and drawings and a selection of works from Fundación Botín's art collection. The bonds between the artworks on display establish a complex, often unexpected, dialogue around desire, the corporeal and the playful, but also the amorphous, the daring and the disturbing. This entanglement of artworks has been conceptualised as a large-scale living organism that takes over the architectural space.

In Eva's sculptures, air becomes a tangible material that creates volumes, shapes and scales capable of changing the perception of ourselves and of the space that surrounds us. These biomorphic volumes allude to biological processes and rhythms related to digestion, gestation and metamorphosis. As such, they create a duplicity of emotions: menacing or nurturing, innocent or perverse. They invite us to relate to art in a sensorial manner: how their texture, their temperature and their rhythm feel...

Conceived for this exhibition space and produced in collaboration with the MACBA, Oozing is an assemblage of large-scale inflatable sculptures, in the presence of which we become minute. We seem to be witnessing an unbridled organic growth, a symbiotic entanglement between worksbodies, forms, materials and colours that hail from worlds we do not yet know, which can take us to make-believe, science fiction landscapes and reminiscent of internal organs. We can caress it, synchronise our breathing with its breathing, and feel its skin as an extension of our own, in an act of communion as beautiful as it is strange.

Growths (2022) exhibition view

La Biennale de Lyon, Lyon, FR

The vividly colourful inflatable sculptures made by Eva Fàbregas evoke the worlds of plants (flowers with their pistils and seeds) animals (carcasses and insect cocoons) and humans (reproductive organs). Hanging from the ceiling, they seem poised to proliferate throughout the venue, thus threatening to contaminate the exhibition areas. Playing with the contrast between the organic forms of her sculptures and the industrial look of the architecture, Fàbregas' artwork invites us to reach beyond binary oppositions between fragility and strength, growth and decay, sensuality and monstrosity.

THE LONDON OPEN CALL (2022)

The London Open Call 2022 (2022) exhibition view

Whitechapel Gallery, London, UK

“The London Open 2022 captures the vibrancy and diversity of the capital’s art scene, reflecting the concerns of the next generation of artists and their insights in challenging times.

The 2022 edition features 46 artists’ works, offering a cross-section of the most dynamic talent from across London. It offers a journey through individual artists’ works and highlights the intersections of common interests, relationships and networks that make up the prolific and international London arts ecology. Embracing the nature of its open submission format, it includes painting, sculpture, moving image, installation and performance, from younger to established artists.

A seismic shift has happened in the artistic and cultural landscape since the last edition of The London Open in 2018. Moving from personal to collective concerns, the cathartic to the poetic, this exhibition traces huge social changes. (...) The London Open 2022 is also a testament to the material impact on artists over the past four years and their resilience, as they continued to make work and found new ways of sharing it (...) The show is loosely structured as a journey from the personal to the social. The downstairs gallery looks at physical, bodily experiences, psychological and spiritual states, questions of memory, expression and performance.”

VESSLES (2022)

Bombon Projects, Barcleona, ES

“(...) Fàbregas’ work reveals in a sense sensual (and sexual) exhilaration. The artist tells me that when she started working in the studio on what eventually became these sculptures, she had this notion of the phallic in her head: the architecture of the dildo, its bright colors and tantalizing forms. But that’s not the symbol that haunts her travails anymore, she says. Instead, she finds herself wanting to work on a scale that can almost replicate hers, creating a cohort of silicon twins and wanting to touch and get parts of her body inside them, fill their cavities, and make them fill hers. A double- way penetration.

To me these sculptures seem to me to be less about intercourse, about two separate parts coming together, than about the fantasy of hermaphroditic omnipotence, the possibility of self-satisfaction and/or self-reproduction. This sexual ambiguity opens up a space of potentiality where anything could happen and any part could serve any genital purpose, therefore foreclosing the need to copulate with external components. The sculptures become self-sufficient, emancipated both from Fàbregas as mother-maker and from their consumers, shirking the expectations placed upon them according to the phantasies of the public: to be soft and warm to the touch, or to be hard, to be penetrated or penetrate, to be arousing, to be entertaining. It is then that we can see their opaque, frustrating and slimy aspects. The works are fun and joyful on first instance, yes, but they also refuse to deliver. They tease and arouse and then frustrate our (in)flamed desires.”

SKIN-LINKE (2021)

Skin-like (2021) exhibition view

Kunsthall Ghent, Gante, BE

The work of Eva Fàbregas investigates how our bodies and our desires are determined by the politics of industrial design. Fascinated by synthetic materials and their production process, she pushes the boundaries of sculpture by encouraging the possibilities of direct tactile involvement, affectivity and somatic experimentation between people and objects. In her work, sexual drives and affection, freed from the biological constraints of the body, are allowed to flow in all directions, blurring the boundaries between organic and inorganic matter. Starting from the prosthetic nature of design, architecture and technology, her work explores the eroticism of utilitarian objects and the mass production of desire. In addition to the formal and architectural qualities of her work, which are also reflected in the strong drawings she makes for her installations, the works are also utilitarian objects and almost become furniture.

Especially for the exhibition, Fabregas created a completely new series of objects. The materiality and the longing for touch that is expressed in Eva Fàbregas' colourful and monumental work form a great contrast with the strictly male and religious origins of the building of Kunsthall Gent. A contrast and tension that takes on a new dimension since the current Corona crisis.

Parte de Mirror Becomes A Razor When It's Broken

Curated by Sonia Fernández Pan

The artistic research undertaken by Eva Fàbregas (Barcelona, 1988) focuses on the body knowledge and the sensory experience that facilitates the policies of the design industry and its continuous and growing production of objects. The almost erotic relationship that exists in both directions —from us to objects and from objects to us— affects not only our bodies but also our desires. Can we talk about a design of emotions from the tactile condition of the material environment? What are the physical responses that the somatic produces in our bodies? What affections are contained in these objects that are designed for the human body? What morphological affinities do they possess amongst each other? Could these objects become emancipated from our desires?

This project is the last of the exhibitions of the series Mirror Becomes a Razor When It's Broken for which Eva Fàbregas continues with the research that has already generated her solo exhibition Those Things That Your Fingers Can Tell at the Kunstverein in Munich (2019).

Those things that your fingers can tell (2019) exhibition view

Kunstverein München, Munich, DE

“The centerpiece of the exhibition is a large-scale, immersive 8-channel sound installation, which consists of three bulbous and textured inflatables outfitted with layers of mesh fabric. Tangled tendrils of medical tubing are attached to the titanic twisting tubes, connecting to sound amplification equipment that not only animates the materiality of the sculptures but also transforms them into resonating membranes. The Jamaican electronic music producers Equiknoxx have produced a soundtrack specifically for this installation, responding to the exhibition’s themes through their idiosyncratic use of cacophonous samples, elastic dancehall ‘riddims’, and cavernous sub-bass dub production. Deploying properties of tactile sound, auditory-tactile synesthesia, and psychoacoustics, this installation encourages altered states of consciousness and physical awareness by locating the act of listening to the skin and bones, the tactile domain. Akin to pulsating tools in physical therapy or a club sound system, the installation allows the beat to throb and traverse different bodies and forms of matter, thereby allowing material communication and interaction between very different entities, human and non-human, and inducing spatial and somatic effects.”

Polifilia (2018) exhibition detail

García Galería, Madrid, ES

The title of the exhibition refers to the term that biologists use to define those groups of organisms with common characteristics that do not share a recent common ancestor. That is, mammals and birds are warm-blooded vertebrates, but in both cases this character has developed independently during the evolution of each of them. But polifilia is also, in its etymological meaning, the love of several or many, what has recently been called polyamory.

This case of homonymy serves Fàbregas to address the main issues of her most recent work. The exhibition presents a new series of drawings on fake leather or, as it is called in spanish, “polipiel”, based on a morphological study of all kinds of tools, prostheses and ergonomic objects that we use directly on the human body. Some have a therapeutic function and an ergonomic design. Some exist to correct functions and others to correct our position or even to provide pleasure but they are always marked by their reciprocal and interdependent relationship with the body. These drawings have a taxonomic ambition: they are a classification of forms, of that in which the imprint of the natural becomes evident as much as its artificial origin.

The artist's drive to gather and classify leads her to study the different forms of these objects as if it were a grammar, in which the variations between one and the other build a morphological language. And it is here when polifilia becomes clear: when we discover that regardless of its original function, the final result shares a series of common formal characters.

Curated by Jordi Antas

A portable audio player connects several objects in an exhibition. Somewhere between an audioguide, a personal trainer, and a score that only the visitor can perform, the recording consists of a soothing female voice that leads the listener through a series of visualizations based on ASMR subculture. Visitors who follow these meditation exercises are invited to cuddle and physically merge with one of the inflatables in the exhibition and to transform into a piece of chewing gum, thus embodying different states of matter.

SCISSORS CUT PAPER WRAPS STONE (2016)

The role of unintended consequences (2016), animation frame, 10 min

CCA Derry, Londonderry, IE

The exhibition takes its title from a 1994 book by Belfast-based science fiction writer Ian McDonald. In Scissors Cut Paper Wrap Stone, McDonald describes a young graphic design student, Ethan Ring, who is able to create images that bypass rational thought and control the mind of the viewer. The ability of Ethan Ring's images to induce tears or ecstasy, to heal, and even kill people attracts the interests of legal, military, governmental, and commercial forces, who all see the opportunities of harnessing this power for their own ends. As well as being a story of art's capacities to change people's emotional and physical behaviour, the book is a story of the artist's struggle to manage these responsibilities.

Unforeseen changes (2016) exhibition view

The Green Parrot, Barcelona, ES

For The Green Parrot's second exhibition, Eva Fàbregas continues her reflection on how industrial design and Modern art can become an "international style" of homogenized and transportable forms sold in the international global market.

In Settlement (2014) Fàbregas uses patterns found in Scandinavian caravan brochures, reproduced to create the wallpapers that now decorate The Green Parrot. These mobile entities are universal dwellings, dreams of Modern architecture, modular manufactured objects that create transportable communities.

Self-organizing system (2014) is a colony of swarming sculptures made from pre-existing designs for protective foams and industrial packaging. The foam pieces are an essential part of the global movement of commodities and yet they are discarded when reaching their destination. The pieces enable commodities and merchandise to circulate transnationally at low cost in containers. By attaching motors and sensors to the foam packing materials, Fàbregas enables them to move around the space as if they were a community in themselves.
